

A Collation of P⁴⁶, \aleph , A, B, D, K, L, 056, 0142, 0243, 223, 330, 1022, 1739, 1799 in Hebrews

Note: Only sections where 0243 is extant have been collated

N.B. Throughout the book, small portions of L have been retraced by A later corrector. In most instances the corrector seems to have preserved the original writing, but sometimes the original or corrected text is illegible.

N.B. In 1:1-4, L is illegible for occasional letters throughout the verses.

N.B. 223 is defective for 1:1-1:6 (begins $\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\omicron\iota$)

The Manuscripts:

- P⁴⁶ Papyrus Chester Beatty II; also University of Michigan Inv. 6238.
Papyrus manuscript, generally dated to about 200 C.E., though earlier dates have been proposed. Contains the Pauline Epistles with many lacunae. In Hebrews, it lacks 9:18, 10:21, 10:31, and portions of other verses. Generally listed as Alexandrian with “Western” readings, though in fact it is not simply an Alexandrian witness but belongs to a special type which it shares with B.
Source for Collation: Based on the transcription by Timothy John Finney. Checked against the appropriate volume of Junack et al, Das Neue Testament aus Papyrus; also against the Nestle-Aland 27th edition
- Ⲙ Codex Sinaiticus, British Museum Add. 43725
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the fourth century. Contains the New Testament complete. Text is Alexandrian.
Source for Collation: Based on the transcription by Timothy John Finney. Checked against the appropriate volume of Junack et al, Das Neue Testament aus Papyrus; also against the Nestle-Aland 27th edition
- A Codex Alexandrinus, British Museum Royal 1 D. VIII
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the fifth century. Contains the New Testament with some lacunae, including 2 Cor. 4:14-12:16. The manuscript is complete for Hebrews, but has many passages which are difficult to read. Text is Alexandrian.
Source for Collation: Based on the transcription by Timothy John Finney. Checked against the appropriate volume of Junack et al, Das Neue Testament aus Papyrus; also against the Nestle-Aland 27th edition
- B Codex Vaticanus, Vatican Library Greek 1209
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the fourth century. Probably originally contained the complete New Testament; now lacks Hebrews 9:14-end along with the Pastoral Epistles, Philemon, and the Apocalypse. In Paul, the text is usually listed as Alexandrian with “Western” readings, but it in fact goes with P⁴⁶ and perhaps 1739.

- D Codex Claromontanus, Paris National Library Greek 107, 107AB
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the sixth century. Bilingual manuscript of Paul, lacking Romans 1:1-6 and with a few leaves (none in Hebrews) in a later hand. “Western” text (i.e. readings are close to those of the Latin versions)
Source for Collation: Based on the transcription by Timothy John Finney. Checked against the appropriate volume of Junack et al, Das Neue Testament aus Papyrus; also against the Nestle-Aland 27th edition
- K Codex Mosquensis, Moscow Historical Library V.93, S.97
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the ninth century. Commentary manuscript. Probably originally contained the Acts and Epistles; now lacks Acts as well as Romans 10:18-1 Cor. 6:18 and 1 Cor. 8:8-11. In Paul, the text is basically Byzantine, with the particular sort of text associated with John of Damascus’s commentary.
Source for Collation: Based on the transcription by Timothy John Finney. Checked against the appropriate volume of Junack et al, Das Neue Testament aus Papyrus; also against the Nestle-Aland 27th edition

- L Codex Angelicus, Rome/Angelican Library 39
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the ninth century. Originally contained the Acts and Epistles; now lacks Acts 1:1-8:10, Hebr. 13:10-end. In Paul, the text is clearly Byzantine.
Source for Collation: Based on the transcription by Timothy John Finney. Checked against the appropriate volume of Junack et al, Das Neue Testament aus Papyrus; also against the Nestle-Aland 27th edition
- 056 Paris, National Library Coislin. Gr. 26
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the tenth century. Commentary manuscript. Contains the Acts and Epistles complete. In Paul, the text is basically Byzantine, with the particular sort of text associated with Oecumenius's commentary.
Source for Collation: Based on the transcription by Timothy John Finney. Checked against the appropriate volume of Junack et al, Das Neue Testament aus Papyrus.
- 0142 Munich State Library Greek 375
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the tenth century. Commentary manuscript. Contains the Acts and Epistles complete. In Paul, the text is basically Byzantine, with the particular sort of text associated with Oecumenius's commentary.
Source for Collation: Based on the transcription by Timothy John Finney. Checked against the appropriate volume of Junack et al, Das Neue Testament aus Papyrus.
- 0243 Codex Ruber, Hamburg, University Library Cod. 50 in scrin.; also Venice, San Marco Library 983
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the tenth century, though Zuntz prefers a later date. Original contents unknown; now consists of 1 Cor. 13:4-end, 2 Corinthians, and Hebrews 1:1-4:3, 12:20-13:25. The portion in Hebrews was originally designated 0121(b) until it was discovered to be identical with the Corinthian fragment 0243. Written in red ink. The text is extremely close to 1739.
Source for Collation: Based on the transcription by Timothy John Finney. Checked against the appropriate volume of Junack et al, Das Neue Testament aus Papyrus; also against the Nestle-Aland 27th edition
- 223 Ann Arbor, University of Michigan MS. 34.
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the fourteenth century. Contains the Acts and Epistles with some minor lacunae (including Hebrews 1:1-6). An unusually ornate volume for a praxapostolos. The text is Byzantine; von Soden identified it as K^c, and spot checks seem to confirm this.
Source for Collation: Kenneth W. Clark, Eight American Praxapostoloi
- 330 Saint Petersburg, Public Library Gr. 101.
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the twelfth century. Contains the Gospels, Acts, and Epistles with some lacunae. In Paul, the text has more Byzantine readings than anything else, but is by no means purely Byzantine; the type is found in a handful of other minuscules (451, parts of 2492, probably 2400)
Source for Collation: M. Davies, The Text of the Pauline Epistles in MS. 2344. (Note: The manuscript, which von Soden considers to belong to the I^{a3} type, is listed in Von Soden's apparatus, but the collation is extremely inaccurate — the worst of all those I tested. It should simply be ignored.)
- 1022 Baltimore, Walters Art Gallery Ms. 533
Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the fourteenth century. Contains the Acts and Epistles complete. In Paul, most of the text is Byzantine, but in the Pastoral Epistles and Hebrews it shifts, apparently becoming an ally of the 1505-1611-2495-Harklean group.
Source for Collation: Kenneth W. Clark, Eight American Praxapostoloi

1739 Athos, Laura B' 64

Parchment manuscript, generally dated to the fourteenth century. Contains the Acts and Epistles complete (Acts 1:1–2:6 are from a later hand; from the pagination, the manuscript probably originally contained the Gospels as well, and when the two were separated, the first portions of Acts remained with the Gospels). In Paul, most of the text is the best representative of a type also represented by 0243 (a very close relative) and 0121 (which may even be a descendent), as well as (more weakly, and partially) by 6 424^c 630 1881 2200. This type is often listed as Alexandrian, but is clearly distinct from the mainstreams Alexandrian text of Ⲙ A etc.

Source for Collation: K. Lake and S. New, Six Collations of New Testament Manuscripts; checked against the Nestle-Aland 27th edition

1799 Princeton (New Jersey), University Library Med. a. Ren. Ms. Garrett 8

Parchment manuscript, dated to the twelfth or thirteenth century. Contains the Acts and Epistles with some minor lacunae (Hebrews is complete). In Paul, the text is mostly Byzantine, but with a few readings against the Byzantine bulk. These do not appear to be of any particular type, and may be derived from the lectionary; 1799 has the lectionary incipits incorporated into the text.
